01:03:55 sarah hood: "Vancouver, this is it!"

01:05:06 Denise Smith: dates on images [within my lifetime] always make me think about where I was at that moment in time

01:06:35 Tabbi Heavner: Because I'm not familiar with Canadian geography, I can't put these images in context as to where they are.

01:06:45 Jenny Haddon: Vancouver Island, BC

01:06:55 Jenny Haddon: Most of BC, actually

01:09:16 Denise Smith: that gives a whole new meaning to the phrase, "a picture's worth a thousand words"

01:13:43 Rachel Friedman: nice!

01:15:42 Betty Rugh: Are all images in a museum site open access?

01:16:03 Rachel Friedman: Project Gutenberg is occasionally useful

01:16:10 Sherry Best: Not necessarily. The artists will likely retain copyright, even if a piece is owned by a museum.

01:16:14 Neal Schlein: No--they'd be copyrighted images unless it's a governmental museum.

01:16:26 Cory Budden: @Betty, I don't believe so. It would only be images in the public domain (either by copyright expiring or copyright waived)

01:16:38 Betty Rugh: Thanks!

01:16:44 Amy Carson: TinEye is useful too <https://tineye.com/>

01:25:05 Kelci McDowell: What about that one light up in the left window?

01:25:29 Jared Oates: @Kelci, I noticed that too 😊

01:25:45 sarah hood: interesting tht the photog choose to get the bobby in the pic

01:26:19 Emily Apterbach: What about the red light?

01:26:29 Rodolfo Frias: Yes, the red light...

01:26:48 Nicholas Bambach: Red Light could signify danger too; allegorical meanings

01:26:51 Susan Korsnick: The viewer's background experience & personal history can play a big role in how they interpret any given image.

01:26:51 Emily Apterbach: Thank you.

01:27:22 Kelci McDowell: Dramatic or manipulative?

01:27:33 Kelci McDowell: Haha, both!

01:28:12 Emily Apterbach: red connects with death

01:28:23 sarah hood: Anyone see Dopesick? The 'studies' done by the opioid companies were manipulated in a similar way.

01:29:47 Vienna Baker: MORCAS!

01:32:54 Susan Korsnick: How do we do "reverse" Google searches?

01:33:33 Sherry Best: search "Reverse Image Search." It will take you to Google. You upload the source image you want to find, and it searches for similar images.

01:34:33 Susan Korsnick: Thank you!

01:34:51 Moriana Garcia: How about rights?

01:34:56 Nicholas Bambach: I'm curious how activism effects the "authority" of an image and the ethics behind that.

01:34:59 John Hosford: <https://images.google.com/> and then click camera icon.

01:35:08 Kelci McDowell: lol

01:37:30 Susan Korsnick: Thanks for a very helpful presentation.

01:37:41 Abby Mastin: Thank you for sharing your expertise!

01:37:42 Rachel Friedman: What trouble might you get from mislabeling an image?

01:37:43 Emily Apterbach: Very intereting. Thank you

01:38:03 Denise Smith`: This has been a great presentation! Thanks for sharing your expertise!

01:38:12 Lucy Bellamy: Thank you so much!

01:38:30 Jeanenne Robinson: What kind of activities do you do with your students? I am looking for programming ideas for teens and new adults. Thanks

01:39:08 Shamin Renwick: Extremely useful presentation, so simply explained.

01:39:11 Marla Price: thank you for your presentation. I learned a lot today

01:39:34 Michele Ensinger: Thank you!

01:40:48 Nicholas Bambach: Do you have difficulty having students/patrons understand images are largely considered primary sources? I'm asking b/c students often forget works of art are also considered primary sources.

01:40:50 Emily Apterbach: students now have a short attention span. Images can help.

01:41:05 Jackson Vance: Such a good think. Kiitos to Nicole Fox, host[s], and attendees.

01:41:36 Kendal Kloostra: program inspiration for teens/young adults?

01:42:19 Amanda DeArmon: wonderful presentation, thank you for sharing!

01:42:55 John Hosford: Thanks for presentation any thoughts on new AI like <https://openai.com/dall-e-2/>.
